In ancient Hebrew, there were no spaces between words, no chapters in scrolls, no vowels, no punctuation of any kind. One had to learn how to 'rightly divide the Word' as they would teach. It had to be parsed carefully to distinguish the actual intended meanings based on specific contexts, as well as the additional meanings of words and sentences overlapping others, all of which were potentially valid even within the same very specific overlapping contexts. All non-Hebrew 'translations' lack some of the additional Hebrew.
